Answer: The main plate boundaries are convergent, divergent, and transform. Explanation: A convergent boundary happens when two plates are moving towards each other: one plate is subducted below another or mountains are formed. A divergent boundary happens when two plates are moving away from each other.

It shows that the reversed polarity of the ocean stripes has actually caused the magnetic field of the earth to change. It shows that the oceanic crust created by the upwelling of magma reflects the current magnetic field at that time, thus different polarities testify to a change. It doesn't prove it, it is an unattested theory.
