Dissolution Precipitation Behaviour Of Ettringite

Since Madrid, evidence has continued to accumulate to support the geochemical dissolution theory. It was shown in that a change of dissolution process should occur at a critical undersaturation ($\ln(\Pi) = -64$ on Fig. 3). Fig. 3 shows dissolution data for alite from , . From this data it is clear that the dissolution rate slows in the range of calcium concentrations equivalent to the ...

Advances in understanding hydration of Portland cement ...

The development of green cements, with the aim of reducing CO₂ emissions, often results in reduced hydration activity, especially during the first hours and days. Nucleation seeding with C-S-H has enormous potential to accelerate hydration, which can compensate for the above-mentioned effect without compromising the long-term strength of seeded cements.
