Schoolwork. I had a grand—brilliant, even—idea in 2012 to publicly archive all of my academia (saved at the time only locally on now long-trashed hard drives) on this website with the notion that I may attract scholars seeking educational refuge, farcically hoping to shortcut the system through search engine; and that I, in the process, would reap ad revenue from these forlorn minds.

Education in South Korea is provided by both public schools and private schools. Both types of schools receive funding from the government, although the amount that the private schools receive is less than the amount of the state schools. In recent years, Incheon Global Campus (with start-up support) has kick-started, and Yonsei University opened an international college to embrace the full ...
